about one in three people with diabetes might go on to develop kidney disease, although, as treatments improve, fewer people are affected.